The Younger Element in Business.

One of the results of the war, in the South, was the bringing into prominence in active business life the younger men, making practical and everyday use of the biblical maxim, "old men for counsel, young men for" business. A generation ago a man had to be grayheaded for bald before he could be a chief clerk or junior partner, now nearly all of our best and most progressive business houses are managed by young or middle-aged men, Among the recent additions of this kind to the live, active, pushing, reliable firms of Memphis is that of Pollard, Voorhies & Matthews, 260 Front street, upstairs, where they have fitted themselves for business as cotton factors and commission merchants, with cotton as their specialty, merchants, with cotton as their specialty and to the receiving, handling and dispos-ing of which they will give their undivided attention. They are each well and most favorably known here and throughout the territory tributary hereto, having been actively connected with prominent business houses of this city for several years. Mr. Pollard, who is a Kentuckian by birth, commenced work here in 1871, as bookkeeper for Howard, Bradshaw & Co., and today is using the same desk at which he comusing the same deak at which he com-menced work eighteen years ago, and in the same room where he has been since 1876, when he commenced work for Sher-rill & Co. He certainly should know his work by this time, and be able to thor-oughly and satisfactorily attend to the office business of the new firm. Mr. Voorhies is also a Kentuckian by birth, and has attended to the sheds and had charge of the cotton sales of one firm for and has attended to the sheds and had charge of the cotton sales of one firm for nearly a score of years. Mr. Matthews was for some three years engaged in mercantile business in Tipton County, Tenn., where he was born, and for sixyears past has been engaged as cotton salesman and traveler for Howard & Co. Mr. Matthews will continue to travel for his new firm, soliciting consignments and making business arrangements with the customers of the firm, and in connection with Mr. the firm, and in connection with Mr. Voorhies will give personal attention to Voorhies will give personal attention to the sale of consignments. This new firm, with the long experience and the well-known personal standing of its members, should rapidly assume a place in the fore-most rank of the Front street houses in their line of trade. They certainly can give the most full and perfect satisfaction to their patrons. They are worthy of and to their patrons. They are worthy of, and should receive, their full share of busi-

Nelson's Busin as College, The value and practical usefulness of business colleges when properly conducted is too well admitted to need any discus-sion now. This class of institutions has become a well recognized necessity in bus-iness circles. The only care needed is to select a good one, for there is as much difference in business colleges as there is in deacons. Age and experience add to their usefulness if they keep up with the times, and with the changes in business ways and methods made necessary by the active work, modern improvement and fierce competition of nowadays. Methods that were all right when the regular profit was 33 per cent. on a year's time will hardly do for a business conducted on a cash basis of 5 per cent. profit. Some thirty-three years ago Nelson's Business College was organized in Cincinnai and commenced practical teaching. It soon came to be recognized as one of the very best, if not the best, in the country, of the few business educational institutions, and available con into favor among live beatment. g live t men as the place wherein to prepare their sons and nephews for taking responsible positions in their houses. A. E. Nelson, the son of the founder, was trained in this school, first as pupil, then as teacher and as he came of age to work for himself, concluded that he could do better with an institution o his own, on the same basis with such improvements as his active mind and his experience had shown to him as possible. Carefully considering the merits of several Carefully considering the merits of several cities he, as the result has evidenced, wisely selected Memphis, and coming here early in 1887 opened Nelson's Business College, corner Monroe and Second streets. Its prosperity and success has shown that he selected more wisely than he knew or anticipated. The reputation he has achieved for it as a live school, a school recognized and patronized by the zhrewd business men of Memphis and the territory tributary thereto as having territory tributary thereto as having adopted the truest and best of the modern ideas and ways of business is unparalleled in the history of schools. A visit to his well-appointed rooms, where visitors and well-appointed rooms, where visitors and inquirers are always cordially welcomed, will show that he has a very select and superior class of pupils, pupils who, com-ing from business homes and business lo-calities, are fitted to receive and do credit to the best business training.
